C · READING /10

Read the passage, then answer the questions on the next page.

A careers club at a secondary school in Douala invited three local professionals to discuss their work with final-year pupils. The organisers initially planned to select participants through an online form. They believed this would save paper and make the process fair, since everyone would answer the same questions. The announcement asked pupils to submit their applications before Friday afternoon.

By Thursday, only a small group had applied. One organiser concluded that the other pupils were not interested. However, a class representative questioned this explanation. Some pupils shared a telephone with relatives, while others had no affordable connection after school. A few had seen the announcement but did not understand whether previous work experience was required. The number of applications therefore revealed a problem, but did not explain its cause.

The club added a paper form, opened a lunchtime help desk and extended the deadline. It also explained that applicants did not need previous experience or a personal device. To avoid favouring confident writers, the organisers asked for a short statement of interest rather than a polished application letter. When more pupils applied than the room could hold, places were allocated by a draw among eligible applicants. A second session was planned for those who could not attend the first.

During the meeting, a mechanic, a translator and a laboratory assistant described both satisfying and difficult aspects of their jobs. They discussed training, teamwork and the importance of asking for clarification. No speaker promised immediate employment. Pupils were encouraged to prepare questions and to compare the information with other reliable sources before making decisions about their future.

Afterwards, the club collected anonymous comments. Several participants said that the alternative application methods had helped them attend. Others wanted more time for individual questions. The organisers could report that participation had widened, but they could not claim that the meeting had improved anyone's employment prospects. That would require evidence collected over a longer period. Their next report would distinguish what they had observed from what they hoped to achieve.

C · READING — QUESTIONS

1. What did the organisers initially believe about the online form? (2 points)

2. Give two reasons why some pupils had not applied by Thursday. (2 points)

3. How were places allocated when there were too many applicants? (2 points)

4. Does the passage prove that the pupils who did not apply were uninterested? Explain. (2 points)

5. Distinguish one observed result from one outcome that remained unproven. (2 points)

D · COMPOSITION /10

Write a formal letter of 200–250 words to your head teacher proposing an inclusive careers event. Explain two barriers pupils may face, propose practical solutions, describe how places would be allocated fairly, and say how you would evaluate the event. Do not invent a claim that the event guarantees employment.
